Suprematism

The supremacy of pure artistic feeling

One of the Ukrainian avant-garde movements

Often lumped together with "Russian" avant-garde, which includes Suprematism, Constructivism, Futurism, Cubo-Futurism, Zaum, Imaginism, and Neo-primitivism

This art movement happened across the Russian empire, but was particularly active in Ukraine and Belarus

Its height was between 1917-1932, the early years of the Soviet Union

Focused on the fundamentals

Circles, squares, triangles, rectangles

This focus came from the ideas that feeling was supreme, rather than the physical object itself

Founded by Kazimir Malevich in 1913

Start and end of the short movement

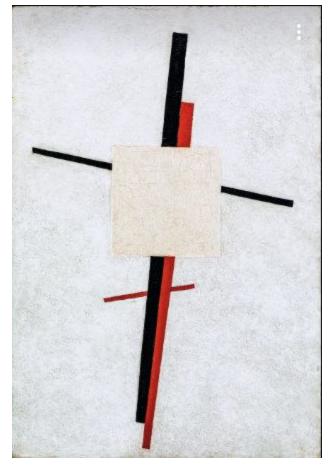

"The Black Square" in an exhibit in 1915, where one would usually find an icon in a house.

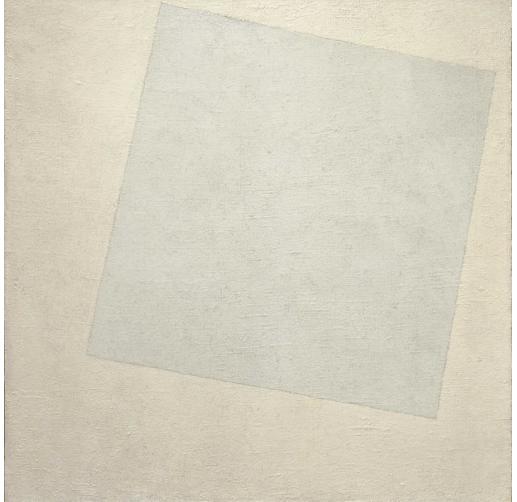

Squashed under Stalin's desires for art that reflected "social realities" ~1930

Malevich was able to exhibit and leave paintings in Warsaw in 1927, which went on to inspire many modern artists.

Distinct from Constructivism

Constructivism, while also abstract, reflects industrial society and urban space, as opposed to abstraction for abstraction's sake
